LISFE is back in town, celebrating its 10 year anniversary! The second weekend of May, Leiden will once again be all about the short films: The 10th edition of the Leiden International Short Film Experience (LISFE) will take place on 11, 12 and 13 May at the Kijkhuis and several other locations around Leiden.

LISFE 2018 will showcase a special selection of the best short films from around the world, ranging from documentaries to horror, from animations to bizarre, from Sci-Fi to experimental. In addition to the film program featuring more than 130 different films from over 30 countries, there will be Q&A sessions with directors, academic workshops, artistic performances and installations that will take place at different locations in the city. You can view the complete program here: <http://www.lisfe.nl/>.

About LISFE

LISFE is an annual festival in Leiden, dedicated to the most original and creative form of filmmaking: the short film. LISFE started off in 2009 and has since been organized by a dedicated team of volunteers from all nationalities, comprising students and young professionals. This year, three prizes are up for grabs: The Official Jury award, the Best Student Filmmaker award and the Audience Choice award.

The festival aims to bring together various art forms and offers a platform to young and talented filmmakers, artists, musicians and students. Our side program includes an art exhibition in collaboration with the Leiden artist collective ROEM in Old School, and various lectures organized on the themes of science and film at Webster University. This year we have partnered up with both Leiden University and Webster University and have designed special sessions and art installations that University students can participate in and offer their critique. With this endeavor, LISFE has managed to become a small part of their academic curriculum, a partnership that will hopefully last beyond this edition.
